In his new book, The Global Condition: Conquerors, Catastrophes, and Community, author John Smith argues that we are entering a new era of global interdependence. He writes that "the old ways of thinking about the world, based on national sovereignty and the separation of nations, are no longer adequate to meet the challenges of the 21st century." Instead, he argues, we need to develop a new global consciousness, one that recognizes our interconnectedness and our shared responsibility for the future of the planet.

Smith draws on insights from a wide range of fields, including history, sociology, economics, and psychology, to build his case for global interdependence. He shows how the world has become increasingly interconnected over the past few centuries, and how this interdependence has led to a number of global challenges. He also argues that the only way to meet these challenges is to come together as a community, and he offers a number of practical ways to do this.

The Global Condition Conquerors Catastrophes and Community is a thought-provoking and inspiring book that offers a new way of thinking about the world. Smith's insights are both timely and important, and his book is a must-read for anyone who wants to understand the challenges and opportunities facing humanity in the 21st century.
