A Spectacle of Unprecedented Scale

The Diamond Jubilee celebrations commenced with a grand procession through the streets of London on June 22nd, 1897. Queen Victoria, adorned in resplendent robes and seated in an open carriage, led the procession, accompanied by her children and grandchildren. The route was lined with cheering crowds, eager to catch a glimpse of their beloved monarch.

The procession culminated in a grand ceremony at St. Paul's Cathedral, where a service of thanksgiving was held in the Queen's honor. The cathedral was adorned with elaborate decorations, and the atmosphere was electrifying as the congregation erupted in a chorus of "God Save the Queen."

A Gathering of Royals and Dignitaries

The Diamond Jubilee festivities attracted a remarkable gathering of royals and dignitaries from across the globe. Among the attendees were the Prince of Wales, the future King Edward VII, and his wife, Princess Alexandra. The German Emperor Wilhelm II, the Russian Tsar Nicholas II, and the French President Félix Faure were also present, along with numerous other heads of state.
